The lofty concave of the vaſt expanſe
Could never be th' effect of giddy chance:
Theſe beauteous and amazing globes of light,
No pow'r could make, that was not infinite,
But when he ſpake, each atom of this frame,
From the dark womb of empty nothing came.

Eclipses for the Year 1779.

There will be four Eclipses this year, two of the Sun, and many of the Moon, in the following order, viz.

1, The first of the Moon, May 30th visible and total, according to calculation as follows.

	H.	M.	S.
Beginning at	10	26	18	Even of the 29 h day.
Begins to be total at	11	35	13
Middle	●	16	4●	Morn of the 30th day
End of total darkness	●	58	7
End of the Eclipse	1	7	2
Duration of total darkness	1	22	54	Equal time
Duration of the Eclipse	3	4●	44

About 16 Digits Eclipsed.

2. The second of the Sun June 14th day; about four o'clock in the morning, invisible to us; but visible in Europe.

N B. The Sun will almost suffer an H. eclipse on the eighth of November, about two in the morning; but I find by calculation, the penumbra will not quite reach the Earth, but will fall in expansum; consequently there will be no eclipse,

3. The third of the moon November 23d day, visible and total, by calculation as follows.

	H	M	S
Beginning at	1	22	2	Equal
Begins to be total	2	21	56
Middle	3	10	24	time
End of total darkness	3	58	51
End of the eclipse	4	58	46	in the
Duration of total darkness	1	36	55
Duration of the eclipse	3	36	44	Afternoon

Digits Eclipsed 20 $\frac{6}{10}$.

The Moon will rise about 18 minutes before the eclipse ends.

4. The fourth, and last, is a very small eclipse of the Sun on the 7th of December about 5h. 41m. afternoon invisible in the Nothern Hemisphere.

The Grand Pilgrimage to Mecca deſcribed.

THE moſt celebrated of the caravans is that which goes every year from Damaſcus, or Aleppo, to the tomb of Mahomet. It generally ſets forward in July, about which time ſhoals of pilgrims arrive from Perſia, the Mogul's territories, Tartary, and from all other countries where Mahometaniſm is profeſſed.

Some days before the caravan ſets out, the pilgrims make a general proceſſion, called the proceſſion of Mahomet; in order as they ſay, to obtain a happy journy, thro' the prophet's interceſſion. Thoſe moſt diſtinguiſhed by birth or riches, appear in the fineſt habits, mounted on horſes ſumptuouſly capariſoned, and followed by ſlaves with led horſes, and camels covered with coſtly ornaments.

The pilgrims, called the iſſue of the race of Mahomet, begin the march cloathed in long robes, with green bonnets on their heads; they walk four in a rank, and are followed by ſeveral muſicians, after which come the camels with two kettle-drums in their front, and many trumpets, the noiſe of which inſpires theſe creatures, with a kind of fierce air.

Next to theſe come on horſeback the other pilgrims, ſix in a rank, followed by carriages full of children, which their parents intend to preſent to the prophet. Theſe are ſurrounded with crowds of ſingers, who at the ſame time uſe a thouſand extravagant geſtures.

Then ſucceed 200 cavaliers cloathed in bear ſkins. They have the management of ſmall pieces of cannon mounted on their carriages, which they diſcharge every hour. Theſe cannon are eſcorted by another company who wear tyger ſkins, in the form of cuiraſſes. Their long mouſtaches, tartar bonnets, and huge ſcymetars give them a very warlike appearance.

Before the Mufti walk 400 men cloathed in green, with yellow mitres on their heads. He is accompanied by the Doctors of the law, and an abundance of ſingers. Mahomet's ſtandard is carried immediately behind him, made of green ſattin embroidered with gold. It is guarded by 12 horſemen in coats of mail, with silver maces in their hands, accompanied with trumpets, and men who strike continually in concert on plates of silver.

Next follows the pavilion to be present before the tomb of Mahomet, borne by three camels adorned with green feathers and plates of silver. It is of crimson velvet embroidered with gold, and set with jewels of all colours.

Lastly the bashaw of Jerusalem, preceeded by drums, trumpets, and other instruments, brings up the rear.

The procession being ended, every Pilgrim thinks of nothing but his departure for Mecca: Which city is in Arabia Fælix, on the river Eda, two or three days journey from the Red Sea. In their progress they pray frequently every day always with their faces turned to that city, on which they bestow the epithet of Magnificent.

The grand Mosque is in the middle of the city: They pretend it is situated on the very spot on which Abraham built his first dwelling house. They call it the square house, believing from tradition that the patriarch's mansion was of that figure. Near it is a kind of chapel, which encloses a well much celebrated throughout the east. They say that the water of that well flows from a spring which God discovered to Aga and Ismael, when being expelled by Araham from his house, they were forced to retire into Arabia

Mahomet took the advantage of this well to render the city of his nativity respected by all his followers. He declared that the water of it had the virtue, not only of curing all bodily diseases, but also of purifying souls stained with the blackest crimes.

His resentment against his fellow-citizens of Mecca, who were for banishing him from the place of his nativity, inspired him with a resolution of being revenged upon them. He declared that Medina should be his city, and the seat of empire for him and his successors. He ordered that his sepulchre should be built there, and accordingly his coffin rests in the great mosque called Kiabi. It is surrounded by a kind of tower, being supported by three marble pillars, and covered with a pavilion of the richest stuff embroidered with gold, and surrounded with a multitude of lamps continually burning The walls of this tower are covered with plates of silver.

To this tomb the caravans come to pay their homage That which brings the presents from the grand Senior, no sooner arrives, than the devisers, who have the care of the mosque, appear to receive it. The Pilgrims make the whole edifice resound their shouts of joy, and songs in honor of their prophet; after which, there is nothing but feasting and open rejoicing until the departure of the caravan.

The day of departing, the Pilgrims assemble again, and set out singing some verses of the alcoran with a loud voice. Every one thinks it an honor to supply them with provisions for the whole journey; and they are sure upon their return to meet the congratulations of all the towns from whence they set out. They are honored every where, and from that time they begin to enter into the possession of all the privileges which their religion grants to those who go to visit the prophet's tomb. Their pilgrimage screens them from all pursuits on former delinquencies, and if criminals, renders them perfectly guiltless.

Not only the Pilgrims enjoy such singular privileges, but also the camels which have had the honor to bear presents to Mecca and Medina, are not to be treated afterward like common animals; they are considered as consecrated to Mahomet, which exempts them from all labor and service. They have cottages built for their abodes, where they live at ease, and are well fed and taken care of.

Jack Rattle: or, the Libertine Destroyed.

JACK RATTLE had a tolerable education. As his father died when he was about fifteen, he was placed, with a fortune of five thousand pounds, under the guardianship of an uncle, a merchant in London, who determined to bring him up in the commercial way. Jack always looked upon a tradesman in a very contemptible light, and piquing himself upon his family (remarkable for nothing since the conquest) paid little regard to his uncle's instructions. He longed to be one of the bucks of the age, and was too conceited to listen to any friendly admonitions. His uncle at last, having repeated his remonstrances, told him that he was now at liberty.

Jack was highly pleased with his dismission. He was of age; he could command his fortune, and he was resolved to enjoy it. He kept a servant, a couple of horses, and a mistress: he lived elegantly, dressed splendidly, entertained expensively. By such imprudent proceedings, he was reduced to a low ebb. He saw the ruin which hung over his head, and he soon schemed a method to prevent it from crushing him by its fall.

He was clear of the world, and had still a few pieces left for a laſt entertainment to his boſom companions. He ſummoned them, and they were welcomed to a ſumptuous banquet. The glaſſes went merrily round, and Jack was more gay, more facetious than ever.

When the hour of ſeparation arrived, Jack called for the bill, and diſcharged it. He than drank half a pint bumper of thanks to his friends, and took leave of them in a ſhort ſpeech. He concluded his exhortation in the following laconic manner—"Adieu—Live happy if you can: if not, follow Me."—At that inſtant he drew out a piſtol and ſhot himſelf through the head.

A pleaſant Anecdote of King Edward IV.

KING Edward IV. is ſaid to have been one of the handſomeſt men of his age; tall, fair complexioned, and of a majeſtic appearance. In the fourteenth year of his reign, a free benevolence being granted to maintain a war againſt France, he pleaſantly demanded of a rich widow what ſhe would give him towards bearing his expences in that war. "By my troth, king," quoth ſhe, "thou art e'en a honſom man, and for thy lovely face thou ſha't ha twenty poonds." That ſum being great in thoſe days, and more by half than the king expected, he gave the widow thanks, and kindly ſaluted her, which had ſo jovous an effect upon the good old lady, that ſhe replyed—"Neay, now, king, by the meſs thou ſha' ha twenty poonds more," and ordered it to be paid accordiagly.

A F A B L E.

Addreſſed to the Statesmen and Kings.

A PEASANT had an aſs that carried panniers, which his maſter filled with apples to the brim. The poor animal, though heavily loaded, troad on with obedient and patient ſteps. At a ſmall diſtance from his village, the clown ſaw ſome ripe apples that hung over the path. "O, ſays he, you can carry theſe, as you carry the others ſo well." The aſs, as patient as his maſter was rapacious, redoubled his efforts, but his ſtrength was unequal to his obedience. They had not gone far before the clown ſaw an apple lie upon the ground. "O, for this one, he ſaid, one can never make any difference." The poor beaſt was unable to reply; but his ſtrength was exhauſted, he ſunk, and died under his burden.

Now the moral is this: The peaſant is the prince, and the aſs is the people; but they muſt be very pacific, aſs like people indeed, who will ſuffer themſelves to be cruſhed to death; if they have any ſpirit, they will die firſt.

IT is the sovereign will of Kings that kingdoms should groan, but they will not groan forever in vain. The period of national evils may come slowly; but let the wretched and the oppressed remember, that most assuredly it will come. We are going to relate a fable: Let the taxed hear, and let the taxers listen.

Towards the beginning of the world there was a vast forest of citron trees, that bore the most beautiful, large, and pleasant fruit. The branches bent under their burdens, and the air far round was embalmed with their fragrant odour. The impetuous winds chanced to blow down several citrons, and to break some of the branches: certain travellers, passing that way, quenched their thirst with the juice of the fruit, and cast away the rind. This accident induced the race of citron trees to chuse guardians who were to drive away passengers, and to inclose the forrest with high walls, to oppose the fury of the winds. These guardians appeared at first, faithful and disinterested, but they soon found that such hard labor produced a violent thirst; they therefore made this proposition to the citrons: Gentlemen, we are ready to perish by thirst in laboring for you; permit us to make a small incision in each of you, that we may have a drop of liquor to refresh our parched throats; you will not be poorer, and we and our children shall thereby acquire fresh strength for your service.

The credulous citrons thought this request not unreasonable, and submitted to the imperceptible contribution. But what was the consequence? When the incision was once made, the the hands of Messieurs, the guardians, pressed them every day more closely. They at last found that citron juice was necessary in all their food; they observed too, that the closer they pressed the fruit, the more juice it yielded. The citrons, seeing themselves thus profusely bled, thought to have reduced their contribution to the primitive stipulation; but the guardians, grown more strong, disregarding all their complaint, put them in a press; and, when nothing else remained, they forced a juice from the rinds, by the aid of terrible machines. They at last bathed themselves in the juice of citrons. The beautiful forest was soon despoiled; the race of citrons became extinct; and their tyrants, habituated to that refreshing liquor, by their prodigality had totally deprived them of it. They all fell sick, and died of a putrid fever. Amen, so be it.

How to remove Freckles.

Take houseleek and celandine, of each an equal quantity; distil in a sand-heat, and wash with a distilled water.

A certain cure for the Cholick, a Flux, the Gripes, or any other disorder of the stomach, from what cause soever.

TAKE myrrh, cochineal, rhubarb, and hiera picra, of each an ounce; bruise them (that their virtues may be more easily and perfectly extracted) and put them into a gallon of double distill'd annifeed water (for want of which French brandy or rum may serve) and after they have lain three days, the liquor is fit for use; but the longer it continues on the drugs, the better it is.

Take the quantity of a small wine glass in any of the above mentioned cases; and if need be (which I never knew an instance of but one, in a most violent fit of the cholic) repeat it in about half an hour.

A Cosmetic water, of great use to prevent pits after the Small-pox.

DISSOLVE an ounce and an half of salt in a pint of mint water; boil them together, and skim the liquor. It is very useful to wash the face with after the small-pox, in order to clear away the scabs and allay the itching, and remove the redness

NO choice had e'er so happy an event,
But he that made it did that choice repent:
So weak's our judgment, and so short's our sight,
We cannot level our own wishes right!
And if sometimes we make a wise advance,
T' ourselves we little owe, but much to chance.

So that when Providence, for secret ends,
Corroding cares, or sharp affliction sends;
We must conclude it best it should be so,
And not despondingor impatient grow.

And, if with humble spirits they complain,
Relieves the anguish, or rewards the pain.

—Who can paint——Like nature? Can imagination boast
Amid his gay creation, hues like these?
And can he mix them with that matchless skill,
And lay them on so delicately fine,
And lose them in each other, as appears
In ev'ry bud that blows? Thomson.

What though, nor real voice or ſound
Amid their radiant orbs be found?
In reaſons ear they all rejoice,
And utter forth a glorious voice,
Forever ſinging as they ſhine,
The hand that made us is divine.

O shame to men! Devil with Devil damn'd
From concord holds, men only disagree
Of creatures rational, though under hope
Of heavn'ly grace: and God proclaiming peace,
Yet live in hatred enmity, and strife
Among themselves and levy cruel wars. Milton.

EXCELLENT RECEIPTS

For the JAUNDICE.

TAKE socotrine aloes and Turkey rehubarb in powder, of each two drams, Castile soap one ounce, Beat them all together, with a little syrup, into a proper consistence for pills. Let them be formed into pills of an ordinary size, and five or six of them taken twice or thrice a-day. They must be continued for some time, and the quantity regulated by the patient's stool, of which he ought at least to have two every day.

For the DROPSY.

TAKE of sedeary root, two drams; dried squills, rehubarb, and juniper-berries bruised, of each a dram; cinnamon powder three drams; salt of wormwood, a dram and an half: infuse in an English pint and a half of old hock wine, and when fit for use filter the liquor. A wine glass of it may be taken three or four times a day.
